

EK | Reversible Knitwear

Fashion Institute of Technology alum Emily Keller made her way to Shanghai around four years ago. After deciding to break out on her own with a line of high quality knitwear, it took her six months to go from conceptualization to execution to a finished collection of pieces that's now on the racks at AK Collection, a new boutique.

EK Reversible features Keller's own pattern stitches in reversible dresses, sweaters, cardigans and skirts made from a Merino wool and cotton blend. The patterns remind us of snakeskin and ostrich hides, and Keller admitted to being inspired by skins.

We love her reversible jacquard dress in dark gray (RMB800), the fitted wine-colored reversible sweater (RMB750) and the Chanel like cardigan in light gray (RMB800). Been EK's first line, the collection only comes in one size, but the fabric is stretchy and fits a range of body types.
